

Women's Foundations Put Their Money Where the Need Is

Economic security is critical for women and girls everywhere. Funding programs to ensure economic security is a priority for funders, yet, lasting security also requires that violence be reduced, leadership increased, and health outcomes improved. This combination of moving parts work together to create a more just world. In 2017, 44 women's foundations invested over $47 million toward moving women and girls from poverty to prosperity.

Here's where the money went:

Each year, Women's Funding Network surveys nearly 100 foundations about the investments they make to achieve gender equality. You can explore the results in Mapping Investments in Women and Girls—an interactive funding map. Specifically designed for funders, nonprofits, and researchers, this map can be used to scan the women's funding landscape, analyze funders' giving patterns, and increase knowledge about trends in women's philanthropy.
